The original Amphitrite Lighthouse at the entrance to Barkley Sound was built in 1906 and was of wooden construction. It was destroyed by a tsunami (tidal wave) in 1914, the beacon was replaced by the current structure almost immediately (1915). Amphitrite has been an automated light station since 1988. Visitors may access the grounds, but not the lighthouse itself. The rocky point offers interesting viewpoints. Be careful though-rogue waves have actually swept people off the rocks to their deaths. The lighthouse illuminates the Wild Pacific Trail where spectacular views of the migrating whales may be seen during March and April. Additionally, the storms in the winter are spectacular from Amphitrite Point. The adjacent Coast Guard centre oversees ocean-going traffic.

We hope you enjoyed our walk!

Welcome to the Wild Pacific Trail:
 For your safety, it is strongly recommended that you stay on the trail. Failure to do so or walking on the rocks below may result in serious injury or death. The trail is restricted to daylight hours only. As this is a wilderness park area, please use caution to protect the environment, yourself and other trail users. The trail may be unsafe during storm surf or high winds may cause tree blow downs. Visitors use trail at their own risk.
CAUTION: You may encounter bears, cougars or wolves anywhere on the West Coast. If you encounter a wild animal while hiking, stay calm and talk to the animal in a confident voice.
PETS: Keep dogs on a leash at all times.
